ABOUT THE TRIBUNAL

The Mental Health Review Tribunal is an independent legal body constituted under the Mental Health Act 2007. The Tribunal has some 47 heads of jurisdiction, considering the disposition and release of persons acquitted of crimes by reason of mental illness or cognitive impairment; determining matters concerning persons found unfit to be tried and prisoners transferred to a mental health facility for treatment.

The Tribunal also reviews the cases of detained (both civil and forensic) and voluntary psychiatric patients; hears appeals against authorised medical officer's refusals to discharge; makes, varies and revokes community treatment orders and determines applications for certain treatments including electro convulsive therapy and surgery. The Tribunal can also make orders for financial management.

CRITERIA

Lawyer members must be Australian lawyers with a current practising certificate/Bar admission.

Deputy President members must be a former or current judicial officer or eligible for appointment as a judicial officer (refer to Selection Criteria). A Member cannot hold concurrent appointments as a Lawyer Member and a Deputy President.

Psychiatrist members must be registered medical practitioners with specialist registration in psychiatry and recognised qualifications as a psychiatrist (such as being a Fellow of the Royal Australian and New Zealand College of Psychiatrists or equivalent).

Other Suitably Qualified members must have professional or personal experience with persons to whom the Mental Health Act 2007 relates, such as people with a mental health condition. Experience with persons with dementia, acquired brain injury, intellectual disability or other cognitive impairments is also valued.

Applicants with lived experience as consumers or carers are encouraged to apply.

Members may be required to travel throughout metropolitan Sydney and on occasion to regional areas of NSW. Members are expected to participate in Tribunal professional development events.

¹ Limited appointments are available for the category of Deputy President however an eligibility list for the period 2024-2026 will be established.
